Annual & biennial reports due from Nebraska business entities

LINCOLN –Limited liability companies, non-profit corporations and limited liability partnerships doing business in Nebraska have until April 1, 2013 to file the required annual and biennial reports. Failure to do so and pay the appropriate fee will result in the business being administratively dissolved.

Forms have been sent to each company with instructions. Secretary of State John Gale says “the sooner entities file, the better.”

“For the past several years we have offered online filing of those reports, which is a great convenience for those business entities and we have further streamlined online filing for these entities,” said Gale.

“Unlike previous years, new and returning businesses do not need to obtain a user name and password in order to file,” said Gale

Reporting entities are encouraged to file the reports online at: ne.gov/go/SOSreports.

Filers will notice that the forms for LLC’s have changed slightly to be compliant with statutory changes that went into effect as of January 1.

“When a business entity is dissolved by the state, it loses its limited liability protection, it loses its credit worthiness since it is no longer in good standing and it could potentially even lose its corporate name. We encourage the affected businesses and nonprofits to not delay in getting this task completed.”

“It’s even more essential now that active businesses file their reports, since another change in the law went into effect January 1, limiting the time that businesses have to reinstate to five years,” said Gale.
